2. Understand the physiologic effects of different mechanical breathing methods, why ARDSNet recommendations are physiologically unsound, and how APRV provides the most physiologically sound method to provide lung protective ventilation.
3. Understand oxygen transport, how hemoglobin protects against hypoxia but supplemental oxygen does not, why the current standard of care with respect to O2 therapy is dangerous and harmful, and how O2 therapy can delay diagnosis and appropriate therapy.
4. Define the respiratory role in PCA monitoring, identify the use of ETCO2 and SpO2 monitoring with PCA, and identify methods for monitoring respiratory depression in patients receiving PCA.
5. List three mucus clearance techniques, explain the advantages and disadvantages of two mucus clearance techniques, and define evidence-based medicine.
6. Understand why and how disruptions in technology develop, the trend to fight against new technology and its impact on patients.
7. Understand the difficulties of CPAP use by patients, the learning difficulties of sleep apnea patients, and review ideas to improve CPAP compliance.
8. Recognize different pre-hospital airway adjuncts, state the differences between airway management in the field vs. in a controlled setting, recognize different levels of training for airway management, and identify a potential shift in thinking about pre-hospital intubation and airway management.
9. Review cases of upper/lower respiratory tract infections, review typical progression of viral/bacterial respiratory infections, discuss case studies that illustrate treatment options for respiratory infections.
10. Discuss the need for and impact of future changes in healthcare, impact of changes on respiratory care, and form a plan for success in times of change and transition.
